Note to families and students: Discussions about Social Injustice can often be emotional and or uncomfortable. Around the world, artists in every arts discipline have found ways to use their talents as a voice to speak out against social injustice. This project explores social justice themes that include women's rights, the civil rights movement and others.

Fine Arts Senior Project Assignments WEEK ONE

Week One Part One:

Read the article "Social Justice and Fairness" by William H. Young https://www.nas.org/blogs/article/social_justice_and_fairness. Consider his position on, and the concepts of Social Justice. Write a one-page reflection about your reading.

What are your initial thoughts about what you read? Do you agree or disagree with the tenets of social justice? Why or why not? Use this space to brainstorm societal issues that you feel strongly about wanting to change. Begin to also consider how you might want to represent this through an art form.

Week One Part 2-

The following questions will help to shape your final product, regardless of whether it is in written form or a performance. Your instructor will help you carve out how to best represent these thoughts and ideas in your work. Answer these questions (2 pages double spaced max) and use them throughout the development of your final project to help shape your work. Advocates for Social Justice go through a similar internal process as they create their works of art.

What is activism? Who or what determines the need for activism? Who are artists that have used their artforms to promote social justice? How did they use their art as a voice? What lessons have you learned from this artist? Identify social justice icons within your discipline. How has the work of the artist/social justice icon helped to shape your artistic practice OR your appreciation of the artist and form of art?

Fine Arts Senior Project Assignments WEEK TWO

Week Two:

Using the article from last week, start thinking about the tenets of social justice. Think about how you feel about the tenets of social justice and the place it should or should not have in our society.

How can this be represented in your artwork? Think about what you would like your end product to be. Jot down some ideas, song/solo choices for a performance, potential monologues you could perform or begin to draft a monologue of your own.

Will it be a composition? Will it be a painting? Will it be a Powerpoint presentation or an Artist Talk about a piece you have created?
Why are you considering this style of presentation?

Develop an outline for your project. Identify the artist, artistic style, influence the artist has had on you as an individual and how this artist has made contributions to social change.

Fine Arts Senior Project Weeks FIVE AND SIX

Consider how you will present your work. What is the major theme? How will you gather necessary resources to show your work? It is important to have a conversation with your instructor about any resources you still may need to complete your project

How will you convey that theme? How will you present your work? Will you do a monologue in character? Will you play a solo or duet, or is your work part of a composition for a small ensemble?

Make necessary adjustments to complete the final product for your work. Plan to engage with your instructor twice this week for necessary last minute revisions.

Week Six Final Product: Using feedback you have received from your instructor, make one last revision to your project. On the day indicated by your instructor, turn in your final project

Fine Arts Performance (Music, Theater, Dance) Social Justice Project. In this project, the student will consult with the instructor and her/his peers to develop a project (e.g., performance, artist talk, TED Talk, Performance, Monologue, A work of Art) that is designed to bring awareness and social change regarding a social justice issue (e.g., discrimination, racism, heterosexism, transphobia, adultism). With this project, students will explore and analyze social justice issues, and then suggest how their art form of choice can be used as a positive action for social change.

The purpose of this project is to reflect on the ways various art forms can be used to speak to societal issues for which you care deeply. To successfully complete this project, you must put yourself in a space where you undertake the challenge of becoming an advocate, in addition to applying artistic ideals with an understanding of the type of artist advocate you would like to become. For this project, you will spend some time thinking about and developing ways to use your talent as an artist to become an advocate for social change.

Essential Questions:

What is activism? Who or what determines the need for activism? Who are artists that have used their artforms to promote social justice? How did they use their art as a voice? What lessons have you learned from this artist? Identify social justice icons within your discipline. How has the work of the artist/social justice icon helped to shape your artistic practice OR your appreciation of the artist and form of art?

Fine Arts Senior Project Assignments WEEK ONE

Week One Part One:

Read the article "Social Justice and Fairness" by William H. Young https://www.nas.org/blogs/article/social_justice_and_fairness. Consider his position on, and the concepts of Social Justice. Write a one-page reflection about your reading.

What are your initial thoughts about what you read? Do you agree or disagree with the tenets of social justice? Why or why not? Use this space to brainstorm societal issues that you feel strongly about wanting to change. Begin to also consider how you might want to represent this through an art form.

Week One Part 2-

The following questions will help to shape your final product, regardless of whether it is in written form or a performance. Your instructor will help you carve out how to best represent these thoughts and ideas in your work. Answer these questions (2 pages double spaced max) and use them throughout the development of your final project to help shape your work. Advocates for Social Justice go through a similar internal process as they create their works of art.

What is activism? Who or what determines the need for activism? Who are artists that have used their artforms to promote social justice? How did they use their art as a voice? What lessons have you learned from this artist? Identify social justice icons within your discipline. How has the work of the artist/social justice icon helped to shape your artistic practice OR your appreciation of the artist and form of art?

Fine Arts Senior Project Assignments WEEK TWO

Week Two:

Using the article from last week, start thinking about the tenets of social justice. Think about how you feel about the tenets of social justice and the place it should or should not have in our society.

How can this be represented in your artwork? Think about what you would like your end product to be. Jot down some ideas, song/solo choices for a performance, potential monologues you could perform or begin to draft a monologue of your own.

Will it be a composition? Will it be a painting? Will it be a Powerpoint presentation or an Artist Talk about a piece you have created?
Why are you considering this style of presentation?

Develop an outline for your project. Identify the artist, artistic style, influence the artist has had on you as an individual and how this artist has made contributions to social change.

Fine Arts Senior Project Assignments WEEK THREE

Week Three: Articulate your purpose

Outline your research or provide a sketch of your intended work. If you are completing an original composition begin to document a theme, identify your music for your original dance composition.

How can this be represented in your artwork? Think about what you would like your end product to be.

Start to develop resources or complete a resource list for your project.

From what artists will you draw your inspiration?

Provide the first eight measures of an original composition, the first eight bars of a dance composition. Write the first paragraph (four to five sentences of a monologue, etc.
